After the Drinks

Lesson for August 21, 1960

THE BIBLE says not a word against whiskey. The reason is the same as the reason why it does not warn against too-fast driving, or the excessive use of sleeping pills, or flying a light plane in freezing rain. These are all ways of cutting life short, just as whiskey is. But the Bible does not mention them because they had not yet been invented. The Bible does warn us many times about the use of wine and the equivalent of beer. Most of the references to "strong drink" could be translated "beer" without seriously changing the meaning.

Dr. Foreman

Death

The prophet Isaiah, looking about him in his own city of Jerusalem, saw a drinking people, men and women for whom social drinking was a well-established, popular habit. But he did not like what he saw. Furthermore, since an authentic prophet is one who sees with God's eyes, we can be sure, if we take the Bible seriously, that God did not like it either.

Does God like it any better in America? In 1958, the last year for which figures are available, the sales of liquor stores were $4,439,000,000. This is just about double what the public spent in shoe stores in the same year.

Liquor advertising accounts for some of this, to be sure. But liquor ads—very attractive they are, too—always show the liquor-drinker before the drinks, never after. They never show the murders committed under the influence of alcohol, they do not show the wrecks caused by drinking (not necessarily drunk) drivers. The ads show a man—before: they do not show him after his drinks have made him less than a man. "The grave has opened its mouth," Isaiah said, referring to his hard-drinking nation. The grave opens its mouth today . . . not to mention the living death of alcoholism.

A nation that spends twice as much in liquor stores as in shoe stores has a very odd standard of values, to say the least. The drinker, even the modest drinker, opens the door to becoming a man (or woman) who cannot think straight. If you were to be operated on, would you like to think the surgeon had just taken a little rum to warm himself up? Would you willingly, fly in a plane if you knew the pilot kept himself pretty well "juned up" between flights? If you were a prisoner, would you like to be sentenced by a judge who had several drinks under his robe? You would not. But if we don't want important things done for us by people even a tiny bit tipsy, we should not want people thinking for us with their brains even a little fuzzed with alcohol. The farther a man goes with a drinking habit, the bigger and bigger the bottle grows, bigger in importance, that is. Isaiah knew that a drinking nation calls "evil good, and good evil."

The Rotten Root

The people, the liquor-loving people, that swarmed in Isaiah's city, he compares to a plant of which the root is rotten and the blossom is dust. They have lost their stamina; they will fail to their enemies like dry grass before a flame! (This same true, we must remember). One of the most frightening features of America is the attitude of many leaders toward liquor. Charles A. Wells, in "Between the Lines" for Jan. 15, 1959, writes: "The favored treatment liquor gets in the U. S. Armed Services, and in U. S. diplomacy, is notorious . . . Liquor gets priority treatment . . . The Kremlin is cracking down on liquor in Russia with severity, and preaching sobriety and temperance—as is Red China. Are not the despoilers in the American defense program guilty of sabotage as much as if they mined a badge or put a time-bomb in a plane? Narcotics squads knock themselves out going after dope-users and peddlers. Why is it nobody much bothers with the enormously larger number of drug addicts who drug themselves with alcohol? Could it be because too many "Important People" are the same kind of drug victims?
